

LEAGUE TO FIGHT OVER FUSION TODAY

Mrs. Day and Samuel B. Scott Will Urge Managers to Fight Combine in November

MAY BOLT IF DEFEATED

Two groups within the Voters' League will battle this afternoon over a proposition to make war on the Combine nominees for county offices at the general election in November.

This issue will be fought out at a meeting of the Board of Managers of the league, at the headquarters, 224 South Broad street.

Franklin Spencer Edmonds, who was chairman of the league's Campaign Committee, and United States District Attorney C. C. Cole believe the independents should accept the results of the primary, which gave a complete victory to the Combine.

Mrs. Frank Miles Day and Samuel B. Scott are among prominent members of the league who do not agree with this view. They are strongly in favor of a fusion slate could win 200,000 votes at the general election.

The attitude of the Voters' League as upheld by Mr. Edmonds and Mr. C. C. Cole was regarded as settled finally last week. But a rift appeared at the end of the week. League members asked if dole acceptance of the primary result would be fair to the 100,000 voters who marked their ballots for the Voters' League candidates.

Leaders in the league are said to be for the meeting this afternoon or will be a critical one for the new or old party. There are even whippersnappers who are for a fight at the general election in November. Some members will bolt and pre-empt a new party title.

Judge Bonnell, of the Municipal Court, wrote to the Voters' League last week, suggesting that the Democratic party be supported next month by nominees. This was regarded as an invitation to fusion.

Those to whom the fusion idea appeals figure that the anti-Combine forces could get a start in the primary. That estimated total, added to the 100,000 who supported the Voters' League ticket, would give the Democrats, could snatch 40,000 votes from the Combine, the proportionate gain.

Mr. Edmonds believes better progress toward clean government can be made if the independent fight within the Republican party. One of his recommendations was that the league establish a competent organization reaching every division in the city.

Leeman and Negro Held for Murder said he was at Twenty-second and South streets at 10:35 o'clock.

At the last session of the inquest, John Thomas, a Negro, living in the neighborhood, had testified that he saw Weisberg leaving the store at 10:45 o'clock. The old couple had not been seen by any one later than 10 o'clock that day.

Weisberg offered the testimony of Mrs. Fisher, 2118 South street, to prove that he had delivered ice to her at 10:45 o'clock, and of Alexander Levin, 2214 South street, to prove he had served ice there at 11:10 o'clock.

Detectives Mulgrew and Tyson, of the Murder Squad, to discount Mrs. Fisher's testimony, testified she had seen them when they interviewed her that she could not remember the exact time when her ice was delivered.

"I could crawl on my hands and knees between 9 and 11 o'clock," said Mulgrew contemptuously. Weisberg said his progress was slow because his horse had a shoe with a loose nail.

It was the positive testimony of Thomas that led the coroner to hold Weisberg.

Shell, the other suspect held, had rented a room some days before the murder in a house occupied by Jerry Anderson, 324 South Race street, the rear of which abutted on the rear of the Wellenbach store. Anderson testified he had lost a key to his front door, customarily hung on a nail, some days before the murder, and had asked Shell about it. Detectives testified they had found a key similar to the one lost on the floor of the store after the murder.

What would have seemed extremely important testimony otherwise was discounted by Anderson's admission that Louis Wellenbach had asked permission to borrow this key, because he sometimes went through Anderson's house to get into his store by a rear entrance. Anderson said he himself occasionally used Wellenbach's gate, and that Shell had used it until Mrs. Wellenbach asked Anderson to tell his tenant to go round the front way. Anderson said he left the house at 4:30 o'clock in the morning that day, leaving Shell asleep.

Shell on the stand said he had not slept in the house that night, because of the heat, but in Washington Square. He had not been in the house all morning, he said, meeting Anderson at 11:30 o'clock in a stable at Sixth and Locust streets. Anderson, Shell testified, met a farmer there and drank some gin the farmer had. Shell denied that Anderson ever had asked him about the key.

CORTELYOU PROBES POLICEMEN'S FIGHT

Charges Bluecoats Are in League With Bootleggers Follow Attack on Vice Squad

ONE MAN IS SUSPENDED

An investigation into the charges that the police in the downtown section are in active collusion with bootleggers in Director Cortelyou's office today.

The investigation was brought about when members of the vice squad, working on liquor cases, were set upon and beaten by policemen attached to the Second and Christian streets station Saturday night.

According to testimony in Director Cortelyou's hands, Detectives Russell and Corey, of the vice squad, were working on liquor cases when they were set upon by a group of policemen and a crowd of idlers. Special Patrolman de Russi is charged with the assault on Russell, and Special Officer Freidman was ordered suspended after he had flatly refused to answer any questions put by Lieutenant Lee, who had been told that Freidman was a witness to the assault.

"There certainly was a slugging match," said Director Cortelyou, "and I am going to get at the bottom of it. I have summoned all the participants to my office. I am investigating the charge that there is collusion between certain patrolmen and the bootleggers. I want first-hand information. Until I get the full reports and have talked to the principals, I cannot make an extended comment on the case."

Bootleggers Were Sought Saturday night Lieutenant Lee ordered his men to go downtown and make some purchases in an attempt to get two notorious bootleggers, who have been watched for some time. Russell and Corey, following the regular procedure of the vice squad, visited three places, obtained samples, and were on their way to a fourth when they were set upon at Second and Christian streets.

The attack came so suddenly that the policemen had no chance to use their revolvers, and a large crowd collected quickly. The first act of the assailants was to smash the bottles the policemen had in their pockets. Several of the participants in the fight are said to have been members of the Second and Christian streets station.

When Corey and Russell explained who they were apologies were profuse. It is said, but they were taken to the station. Acting Captain Coan appeared on the scene at this juncture and started to question the two men. They refused to answer except through their superior, Lieutenant Lee, who went to the station. Here was where the clash came which ended in the order for Freidman's suspension.

Coan advised Freidman to answer the vice squad leader's questions, but he persisted in his refusal.

"The entire condition," said Assistant Director of Public Safety George S. Tompset, "is due to a law which failed to command observance by some officers of the law and by many citizens who observe all other laws. In the train of bootlegging have come petty robberies, burglaries and hold-ups. For the greater part, these are being committed by idlers who disdain work."

"They are neighborhood jobs, as a rule, perpetrated by persons who are familiar with the habits of the ones who are attacked and with the conditions in the buildings entered. Men who have never broken a law in their lives are today conscious criminals according to the new law."

"I have in mind a man worth half a million dollars who has never kept liquor in his home for some reason. That man simply has to have three drinks of whisky a day, according to his notion, and he says he slips into vile places to get bad liquor at exorbitant cost surrounded by a collection of set upon at Second and Christian streets.

His House in Order

By DR. BERTHOLD A. BAER

Does it really not matter what happens to us after Death? If so, why do we live to leave a good name, a memory to be cherished?

We do prepare for Death while we live, but our preparations do not go far enough.

Years ago people were afraid to talk about Death—many are today.

Humanity became more enlightened, and people began to select their burial ground.

Then they engaged architects and began to build costly Mausoleums.

A man of affairs, standing before a Mausoleum, the beautiful frame, realized that his friend had failed completely by not providing a proper picture for the same, as there was placed in the permanent frame the most fallible picture, "A Wooden Casket."

After careful investigation the man of affairs became convinced that only Bronze is lasting, permanent, indestructible. He built his Mausoleum and placed in every crypt therein a genuine Bronze casket, such as you may see at any time at Asher's Broad Street Chapel, 1309 North Broad Street.
